Viva Paper Towels + Clean House

Viva Paper Towels will team up with the hit television show, Clean House, and sponsor the “Messiest Home in America” contest. With Viva Paper Towels by your side, there is no mess too messy to clean up. And that is what we are looking for. We are searching for the dirtiest, grimeiest, most mind-shattering messes in the country. The title of the “Messiest Home in America” does not rest in our hands though. Consumers will be encouraged to submit their own photos and videos showing the world the sheer atrocity of their homes. Users can then vote for what they think is “America’s Messiest Home”. The winning home will be thoroughly cleaned, as well as featured on an episode of Clean House.

Step One:

Upload a photo of your mess.

Step Two:

Vote for the title of "Messiest Home in America."

Step Three:

Finalists send in videos, which get promoted on Youtube.

Day Trip Planner

Zipcar will generate a custom day trip for users based on answers to general questions as well as interests and hobbies. Users can also plan their own trip using reviews from Yelp! and location specific tweets. All created day trips and maps can sync directly to your mobile phone.

to treat me differently, almost like I was a fragile Christmas ornament endangered of breaking. My mother seemed to set up a security check on everyone that would come to our home, attempting to establish the rules and boundaries of our conversations. This was very uncharacteristic of my parents liberal and somewhat unstructured parental approach. My goodness, even my lifelong friends were not engaging in our normal peer functions interactions.

Approximately one week after my operation, I was informed that I needed to schedule another "precautionary" surgery involving a lymph node dissection. They were now using the word tumor regularly and were stating that they felt that all of the tissue was removed. However, it was necessary to conduct this "precautionary" procedure. On January 27, 1998, I had the lymph node dissection procedure. The following day I woke up in ICU, swollen beyond recognition (allergic reaction to morphine), cramping vigorously in my abdomen (caused by surgical staples, fighting for oxygen), convinced that I was dying. My strongest recollection was wanting to hold onto anything that contained life, attempting to absorb any energy that would enable me to live. Fortunately, the strong hand of my older brother was available. Ironically, this was the same hand that had inflicted physical pain during our hot and heated sibling rivalry episodes. However, all of that past turmoil seemed to dissipate as he sat with me for unlimited hours promising not to leave.

Two days later, still resting in the hospital, I was greeted by a middle-aged man and his younger assistant. He introduced himself as an oncologist. I asked him what that was and he proceeded to inform me that he was a cancer specialist. Still unclear about the correlation, I inquired how that pertained to me and he informed me that I indeed had cancer. My initial reaction was somewhat hysterical. This time there was no containment of the tears. As the tears rolled off my face, my only thought was that I was dying. Every time I had heard the word cancer it was closely correlated with death. I asked him if I had a chance of surviving and he stated that I did; however, that this would be the biggest challenge of my life. He went on to inform me of the procedures (chemotherapy) that it would entail, and of some of the side effects (hair loss, nausea, weight loss, etc.) I could anticipate. After sitting down with me, tolerating my emotional reactions, educating me, answering my questions that would help me prepare for this battle, I looked him straight in the eyes and told him "let's get it done."

After sitting down with me, tolerating my emotional reactions, educating me, answering any questions that would help me prepare for this battle, I looked him straight in the eyes and told him "let's get it done." At this moment my doctor and I established a partnership. The importance of having this connection is essential. I knew in my heart that this man was available and that he cared about my well-being.

At this moment my doctor and I established a partnership. The importance of having this connection is essential. I knew in my heart that this man was available and that he cared about my well-being.

We did eight months of chemotherapy, with treatments the doctor stated would have killed a middle-aged man. I did lose my hair, 65 pounds and quite possibly my hopes for future fertility. (My oncologist did not inform me of sperm bank deposits and when inquiring about why he did not inform me of that choice, he replied that he did not think that I could afford it!) However, thanks to God, my oncologist (Robert Lowitz, MD), the love and encouragement of my family and friends, as well as my strong will to survive, I have survived this disease. Since achieving a clean bill of health, I have proceeded to attain my masters and doctorate degrees in clinical psychology, conducted my thesis and dissertation research devoted to enhancing the knowledge on the psychosocial implications of cancer, educate healthcare workers and devote my private practice to cancer survivorship.

- Through my experiences, I would like to offer some helpful hints.
- Seek out a doctor that you can communicate with and that has a solid reputation.
 - Seek out information so that you can be an active (not passive) participant in your recovery.
 - Start a journal documenting your concerns/questions to share with your doctor.
 - Bring a friend/loved one with you to your appointments.
 - Join a cancer support group for post-surgery, information and coping skills (research indicates it can enhance the quality and quite possibly the quantity of your life).
 - Talk to your doctor about resources available to manage common psychological symptoms (depression, anxiety), i.e., anti-depressants, anti-anxiety agents, mental health professionals, etc.
 - Start a journal to provide a forum for emotions, helping to ventilate and further process your emotional needs.
 - Surround yourself with people who are emotionally available.
 - Take time to learn progressive relaxation techniques, guided imagery and/or meditation. Relaxation has been empirically proven to enhance the immune system.
 - If possible, attempt to find some sort of meaning, growth (i.e., interpersonal, spiritual, opportunity, or "silver lining") from this unfortunate predicament. This can help alleviate feelings of victimization.

Editor's Note: Dr. Gonzalez and his wife, Jamie, currently reside in Redlands, California where he is employed as a clinical psychologist in a private practice setting. Dr. Gonzalez also facilitates numerous cancer support groups and is currently active on the Board of Directors for the American Cancer Society. ■

MAD MEN + foursquare

Mad Men will team up with dozens of bars throughout New York City through foursquare. Mad Men will seamlessly integrate itself into a service that people already use on a daily basis, by immersing them in a quest for free whiskey.

Lightweight

For every first “check-in” at a Mad Men bar, users get one free whiskey drink.

Don Draper

When you become the “Mayor” of a Mad Men bar, you get unlimited $2 whiskey drinks (until your mayorship is overthrown).

Don Draper's Fool-Proof System to get in between her legs

(Don Draper is sitting in a chair, stands up and lights a cigarette.)

Hi there. My name's Don Draper, and I've had the pleasure of sleeping with many different woman throughout my time here at Sterling Cooper. (pause) No literally, HERE at Sterling Cooper. For instance, right here on this desk. In the maintenance closet. In the copy room. In the break room. And under Roger Sterling's desk. Now, you might be asking yourself, "Don, how do you do it?" Well I'm going to tell you. Follow my fool-proof system, and your lady's panties will be on the floor faster than you can say "Old Fashioned".

The first and most important step of the Don Draper system is simple. (pause) The pocket-square. Now, I'm not sure why but women love them. It's as if you have some sort of polar-magnetic field in your jacket pocket that instantly sheds a woman's undergarments when she gets close.

Step number two. (pause) Carry a conversation with as few words as possible. Better yet, if she asks you a question...don't answer. Respond with an expressionless, yet passionate gaze into her eyes. It's true. Women love the strong and silent type.

And now for the third and final step. (pause) Be a man. Not just any man though. Be a man who physically and intellectually dominates co-workers, clients, bus boys, and minorities. Women love a man who is articulate and poetic enough to make another grown man weep with his prose, but also a man who is physically capable of chopping down three-square miles of forest with only a hatchet. Been there, done that.

So there you have it. Follow my three simple steps and you'll be in bed with your woman faster than Richard Nixon's time in office.

to want me differently, almost like I was a fragile Christmas ornament endangered of breaking. My mother seemed to set up a security check on everyone that would come to our home, attempting to establish the rules and boundaries of our conversations. This was very uncharacteristic of my parents liberal and somewhat unstructured parental approach. My goodness, even my lifelong friends were not engaging in our normal peer lighthearted interactions.

Approximately one week after my operation, I was informed that I needed to schedule another "precautionary" surgery involving a lymph node dissection. They were now using the word tumor regularly and were stating that they felt that all of the tumor was removed. However, it was necessary to conduct this "precautionary" procedure. On January 23, 1986, I had the lymph node dissection procedure. The following day I woke up in ICU, well ten beyond recognition (allergic reaction to morphine), cramping vigorously in my abdomen (fastened by surgical staples, fighting for oxygen, convinced that I was dying. My strongest recollection was wanting to hold onto anything that contained life, attempting to absorb any energy that would enable me to live. Fortunately, the strong hand of my older brother was available. Ironically, this was the same hand that had inflicted physical pain during our hot and heated sibling rivalry episodes. However, all of that past turmoil seemed to dissipate as he sat with me for uncounted hours promising not to leave.

Two days later, still resting in the hospital, I was greeted by a middle-aged man and his younger assistant. He introduced himself as an oncologist. I asked him what that was and he proceeded to inform me that he was a cancer specialist. Still unclear about the correlation, I inquired how that pertained to me and he informed me that I indeed had cancer. My initial reaction was somewhat hysterical. This time there was no containment of the tears. As the tears rolled off my face, my only thought was that I was dying. Every time I had heard the word cancer it was closely correlated with death. I asked him if I had a chance of surviving and he stated that I did; however, that this would be the biggest challenge of my life. He went on to inform me of the procedures (chemotherapy) that it would entail, and of some of the side effects (hair loss, nausea, weight loss, etc.) I could anticipate. After sitting down with me, tolerating my emotional reactions, educating me, answering any questions that would help me prepare for this battle, I looked him straight in the eyes and told him "let's get it done."

After sitting down with me, tolerating my emotional reactions, educating me, answering any questions that would help me prepare for this battle, I looked him straight in the eyes and told him "let's get it done." At this moment my doctor and I established a partnership. The importance of having this connection is essential. I knew in my heart that this man was available and that he cared about my well-being.

At this moment my doctor and I established a partnership. The importance of having this connection is essential. I knew in my heart that this man was available and that he cared about my well-being.

We did eight months of chemotherapy, with treatments the doctor stated would have killed a middle-aged man. I did lose my hair, 65 pounds and quite possibly my hopes for future fertility. (My oncologist did not inform me of sperm bank deposits and when inquiring about why he did not inform me of that choice, he replied that he did not think that I could afford it!) However, thanks to God, my oncologist (Robert Lowitz, MD), the love and encouragement of my family and friends, as well as my strong will to survive, I have survived this disease. Since achieving a clean bill of health, I have proceeded to attain my masters and doctorate degrees in clinical psychology, conducted my thesis and dissertation research devoted to enhancing the knowledge of the psychosocial implications of cancer, educate healthcare workers and devote my private practice to cancer survivorship.

Through my experiences, I would like to offer some helpful hints:

- Seek out a doctor that you can communicate with and that has a solid reputation.
- Seek out information so that you can be an active (not passive) participant in your recovery.
- Start a journal documenting your concerns/questions to share with your doctor.
- Bring a friend/loved one with you to your appointments.
- Join a cancer support group for peer support, information and coping skills (research indicates it can enhance the quality and quite possibly the quantity of your life).
- Talk to your doctor about resources available to manage common psychological symptoms (depression, anxiety), i.e., anti-depressants, anti-anxiety agents, mental health professionals, etc.
- Start a journal to provide a forum for emotions, helping to ventilate and further process your emotional needs.
- Surround yourself with people who are emotionally available.
- Take time to learn progressive relaxation techniques, guided imagery and/or meditation. Relaxation has been empirically proven to enhance the immune system.
- If possible, attempt to find some sort of meaning, growth (i.e., interpersonal, spiritual, opportunity, or "silver lining") from this unfortunate predicament. This can help alleviate feelings of victimization.

Editor's Note: Dr. Gonzalez and his wife, Jamie, currently reside in Berkeleyfield, California where he is employed as a clinical psychologist in a private practice setting. Dr. Gonzalez also facilitates numerous cancer support groups and is currently active in the Board of Directors for the American Cancer Society. ■
